Dim Outlines Of Possible Pact Appear

Big Four Ministers Race Time In Quest For Compromise

GENEVA (AP) - Outlines of possible Berlin compromise emerged Sunday night through the smoke of East-West controversy as the Big Four entered their make-or-break sixth week of Geneva talks.

But some very delicate diplomatic dealing remained between the promise and fulfillment of any East-West accord on the disputed city's future.

There was no assurance a new Berlin pact would be concluded at this conference of foreign min-

Gromyko Holds Key To get agreement on the time, place and work program of a summit conference this summer, Gromyko Monday or Tuesday may shed or shelve the one-year time limit condition which highlighted his stopgap Berlin plan.

Such a step could clear the way for an agreed East-West communique in which the two sides would pledge to stand still in Berlin pending a longer-term arrangement; to refrain from increasing tension; to improve conditions in

Thus the urgent problems facing the Big Four will be to insure this parley does not collapse and to set up signposts toward a Berlin pact that could be concluded at the summit.

Raising Federal Interest Rates

Will Congress grant the President's request to remove the present interest ceilings on government bonds and raise the limits, permanent and temporary, on the national debt? After some cries of pain and outrage, the necessary legislation will probably be forthcoming.

There is not much question that the interest ceilings on savings bonds and on bonds of more than five years maturity will have to be raised. If Congress tries to insist on maintaining the present tops, the government may not be able to sell its bonds.

As the President noted, the rapid growth in the borrowing demands of corporations, individuals, state and local governments has driven interest rates up and the federal government must meet the competition.

It may offend some sensitive natures that the United States should no longer be able to market savings bonds for less than 31/4 per cent, or long term bonds for less than 41/4 per cent, but there is really no occasion for feeling that way. Actually, these rates are too low, under present conditions, even though it is true that the government has paid lower rates in the past.

In a free economy the market place determines the rate to be paid on borrowed money. When the federal government goes into the market place to borrow, it must expect to pay the going rate for prime paper. No artificial limit on interest can be maintained for long.

As for the President's proposals on the debt ceilings, they may run into more formidable opposition. But these new and higher limits are needed, he says, so that the public debt can be properly managed.

The public debt must be managed so as to safeguard the public credit," the President said in his special message. "It must be managed in a way that is consistent with economic appeared in either country, growth and stability."

It should be reduced, of course, but Congress seems not to be in the mood for that.

These Days

By George E. Sokolsky

The Baccalaureate

Comes June and oratory flows in the land. Every svery sharp in recent weeks. On university and college, big and little, has its Commencement and its speakers who instruct the few young and the many oldsters who come to see youth sent out into the world.

Sometimes the addresses of the great men who speak at these fiestas are published in the newspapers, in whole or in part, and usually much of it is a collection of words which are neither elevating nor of sound composition. Oratory, having long ceased to exist as an art, is never provided any more and the reading of manuscripts is sometimes alleviated by the teleprompter, which, however, has the effect of making some speakers appear to be cockeyed.

Despite all that has happened in the world in recent years, particularly the intensification of nationalism and the betrayal of the Western world by Soviet Russia, there are still those who feel compelled to rise on occasions such as these to advocate limited sovereignty, to pronounce favorably on internationalism and to give youth the concept that patriotism is a sin.

Unfortunately such prophets are not only poisoning the well-springs of America but they are misleading the young who sooner or later, if they are not contrivers or unfortunate, will be called upon to serve their country and its flag and who will waken each morning for two or three years to feel the full force of this country's sovereignty.

The one-worlder does have Isaiah to back him up but not the draft which every boy, as soon as he gets out of college, is likely to face. Some do evade it by trickery but should war come, as it often has, they have an unpaid debt to settle and many of them are caught by their own devices at most inconvenient times. The draft-dodger remains a louse in the American concept of fair play.

Of course, girls may listen to the one-world speeches with starry-eyed emotionalism, hoping that the day may come when their marriages will not be postponed by such unpleasantness as universal military service. However, American women - that is, those who are truly American - have never wanted their menfolk to be either cowards or cheats and they have never run away from the consequences of life. We still breed a good stock.

The one-worlder does advocate a noble ideal, but history is moving the other way. Asia has thrown off the shackles of imperialism to replace them by the shackles of intensive nationalism. So has Africa. So has most of Europe. Only the United States has lost its sense of nationalism and patriotism and is paying a fearful price for accepting phraseology for truth and hope for fact. The danger is that some of our people think not in terms of the welfare of their own country and their responsibility for its survival, but rather in terms so broad, so widespread, as to be realistically meaningless except to a cover for blatant selfishness.

The good old Commencement Day orator who preached love of country in poetic language and heated oratory was much closer to the truth and to morality than those unfortunate weary old men who hope to be regarded by youth as forwardlooking because they preach a doctrine of a world of love, as did Micah and Confucius and about everybody else, including Leo Tolstoy, only it never happened. The idea is that if one sets his ideals far enough ahead, say four or five thousand years away, he cannot possibly be wrong, for who will say him nay?

So, one spends an hour or two reading the reported remarks of the so-called great men, some of whom are truly useful in their own limited fields but who, when they speak in terms philosophical, generally have to hire a speech-writer to bring Edmund Burke or Patrick Henry or perhaps Karl Marx up-todate and so their words are nostalgic and one wonders where he read them before and in what context. It becomes particularly amusing to listen to a hardboiled businessman, who in his proper domain fights horror came over his face. "They against doctrines which, in the hired speech, flow aren't here," he groaned. "I You must have heard about the from his lips like manna from Heaven. And then one must have put them in the pocket cowardly counterfeiter. He still know that a prankster played a trick on him? (Copyright, 1959, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

wonders, does she know what he is reading? Does he of the man sitting next to me!" has the first dollar he ever made.

when you weren't looking. I'm Silently, father and son quicktrying to find a place now to get ered their pace and slipped rid of them." Then a look of around a corner.

Senators Squelch Grandstand Play To Put 169 Teamsters On Stand

WASHINGTON - A grandstand play to put 169 teamsters on the Senate witness stand today (June 15) has been nipped by Sen. John McClellan, Arkansas Democrat, and Sen. Barry Goldwater, Arizona Republican. The move was planned by eager-beaver Bob Kennedy, younger brother of Sen. Jack Kennedy of Massachusetts, as a final flare before he resigns to manage his brother's campaign for president. Bob Kennedy has been counsel for the Senate Rackets Investigating Committee.

Kennedy had issued subpoenas for the 169 teamsters, most of whom had already testified. They included some of the top officials in the union, and young Kennedy planned to give them a public lecture which would bring big headlines.

However, when McClellan and Goldwater got wind of the plan they quietly applied the veto. As of this writing all but 40 of the subpoenas have been withdrawn, and the remainder are in the process of being withdrawn on the ground that Senator McClellan is ill - which has been the

Nixon Vs. Milton

Vice President Nixon was really fit to be tied when the White House announced that the President's brother Milton would accompany Nixon to Moscow.

The Vice President considers himself quite an old hand at goodwill missions abroad. He has made several - to Asia and the By Drew Pearson Orient, two to Latin America, one to England, one to Africa. Therefore, to have Milton Eisenhower tagging along meant, first, that he would have to share the Moscow limelight, and, even more important, share the headlines in American newspapers.

Nixon's mission to Moscow has plenty of overtones of presidential politics, and headlines are important.

When the Vice President showed visible irritation over sharing the trip with Milton, a White House emissary explained to him that Ike felt Khrushchev would talk more freely if he knew he was also talking to the President's brother.

This only made Nixon madder. For the White House explanation was a direct reflection on his own ability as a diplomat-reporter. Furthermore it has become known, contrary to earlier statements, that Milton will take the entire trip with Nixon - through Siberia and everywhere else.

Note - To White House insiders, this confirms the belief that Ike is a long way from giving his blessing to Nixon as the GOP candidate in 1960. Ike And Adenauer

Though the United States prides itself on keeping out of European domestic politics, the White House, by accident or otherwise, was embroiled in the German political feud up to its

Inside fact about the Adenauer-Erhard battle was that the pudgy German Vice Chancellor had suspected some weeks ago that the Eisenhower administration was against him. So right in the middle of the battle for German leadership he made a special trip to Washington to find

In various conferences at the State Department and the White House he inquired whether it was true, as reported, that President Eisenhower was opposed to his becoming Chancellor of Ger- relation. many. Naturally he got em-inquiries. Erhard's worst fears were realized. Adenauer, back in Bonn, announced that he would continue as Chancellor.

The Vice Chancellor has now patched up his differences with the 83-year-old Chancellor, but it's an uneasy truce. And the inside word is that Adenauer will step down in six months in favor of Erhard. When that time comes, the United States will have a very irritated friend in the driver's seat in Germany. For Erhard strongly suspects that he was given the runaround in Washington and that the emphatic denials that Ike was opposed to him were merely diplomatic denials.

Strauss And Anti-Semitism??

Many Jewish leaders are concerned over the attempt of some Jews to make the fight against Admiral Strauss appear motivated by anti-Semitism. They are fearful, first, because the majority of Jews are against Strauss in view of what he did to Dr. Robert Oppenheimer; second, because any attempt to put Senate voting on a religious basis is bound to backfire against a minority group.

Two prominent Jewish Senators, Ernest Gruening of Alaska and Dick Neuberger of Oregon, incidentally, plan to vote against Strauss.

Significantly, Jewish groups have also gone out of their way to express confidence in Sen. Gale McGee of Wyoming, the member of the Senate Commerce Committee who attended every single one of the Strauss hearings and has been most vigorous in his opposition to the Secretary of Commerce.

Recently McGee was invited to speak before the United Jewish Appeal in Chicago at the Twin Orchard Country Club. Coincidentally, the chairman of the meeting who introduced the opponent of Strauss with words of tribute was Charles Strauss. No

Political trends in Britain as well as in the United States are primarily affected by economic contentment or discontent or by emotional issues, particularly those related to war or peace. That's why there has been pressure in this country for an agreement with the Soviets to suspend nuclear tests and a considerable demand for a "summit" meeting. The drive for these two things is associated in the public mind with progress toward peace. Indeed, there is noticeable here an almost pacifistic sentiment which doesn't appear

Both men have one big concern - the position that President Eisenhower might take at the Pepublican nominating convention. By all rights, Eiser.hower could be expected to support Nixon actively. The suggestion heard in governmental circles here is that, if the Socialist Labor Party really backs the idea of "unilateral" suspension of nuclear tests, the country will be persuaded to believe that it cannot entrust the reins of power to any government with such a concept of national duty. The Conservatives would be quick to take advantage of the split in the Socialist Labor Party ranks. For the more responsible elements in that party are as bitterly opposed to any "unilateral" action as anybody in the present government.

There can be no doubt that a Conservative trend has developed here in Britain and that the British people have veered away from the "nationalization" concepts on which the Socialist Labor Party has campaigned in past elections. The leaders of that party talk less and less of socialization schemes, because they know that the confusion which resulted in such industries as were nationalized has been widely publicized.

She's a little woman, blonde turning gray. She was always pretty, with a trim figure, except for a time in her early married life when she ate all her frustrations and looked like a tiny balloon. She was a neat dresser, too, and once in a while, when I whispered: "You look real sharp tonight, kid" she'd look up in surprise and say: "This dress? I've had it four years.

There were two boys and a girl in our family: Jim, John and Adele, spaced about two and a half years apart. My mother was always strict, always religious, and always worrie' about her one daughter. The boys-well, what can you do with boys? But Adele, that was something else. My mother burdened the child with so many lectures about morality and purity that I could never understand where the kid got the nerve to go out on a date.

But she went. And she fell in love with a skinny lad who was trying to coax a few hairs to emerge on his upper lip. She married him when she was too young. To everyone's surprise, Adele turned out to be a born housekeeper. The floors gleamed. the furniture was waxed, the kitchen was spotless, even the crocheted doilies looked crisp.

They had three children: Robert and Jean and Elinor. The boy was still an infant when he developed a rash. Adele, not much more than a child herself, put him in a hospital. It was a long tedious job. Mom was blind, feeble, and just as much the boss as when we were all children. Adele had to take it. She even gave my mother her daily bath, powdered her body, and fixed her hair-just as, once upon a time, the positions were reversed. My mother is gone, and my

Will Congress grant the President's request to remove the present interest ceilings on government bonds and raise the limits, permanent and temporary, on the national debt? After some cries of pain and outrage, the necessary legislation will probably be forthcoming.

There is not much question that the interest ceilings on savings bonds and on bonds of more than five years maturity will have to be raised. If Congress tries to insist on maintaining the present tops, the government may not be able to sell its bonds.

As the President noted, the rapid growth in the borrowing demands of corporations, individuals, state and local governments has driven interest rates up and the federal government must meet the competition.

It may offend some sensitive natures that the United States should no longer be able to market savings bonds for less than 31/4 per cent, or long term bonds for less than 41/4 per cent, but there is really no occasion for feeling that way. Actually, these rates are too low, under present conditions, even though it is true that the government has paid lower rates in the past.

In a free economy the market place determines the rate to be paid on borrowed money. When the federal government goes into the market place to borrow, it must expect to pay the going rate for prime paper. No artificial limit on interest can be maintained for long.

As for the President's proposals on the debt ceilings, they may run into more formidable opposition. But these new and higher limits are needed, he says, so that the public debt can be properly managed.

The public debt must be managed so as to safeguard the public credit," the President said in his special message. "It must be managed in a way that is consistent with economic growth and stability.

It should be reduced, of course, but Congress seems not to be in the mood for that.

These Days

The Baccalaureate

Comes June and oratory flows in the land. Every very sharp in recent weeks. On university and college, big and little, has its Com-mencement and its speakers who instruct few young and the many oldsters who come to see youth sent out into the world.

Sometimes the addresses of the great men who speak at these fiestas are published in the newspapers, in whole or in part, and usually much of it is a collection of words which are neither elevating nor of sound composition. Oratory, having long ceased to exist as an art, is never provided any more and the reading of manuscripts is sometimes alleviated by the teleprompter, which, however, has the effect of making some speakers appear to be cockeyed.

Despite all that has happened in the world in recent years, particularly the intensification of nationalism and the betrayal of the Western world by Soviet Russia, there are still those who feel compelled to rise on occasions such as these to advocate limited sovereignty, to pronounce favorably on internationalism and to give youth the concept that patriotism is a sin.

Unfortunately such prophets are not only poisoning the well-springs of America but they are misleading the young who sooner or later, if they are not contrivers or unfortunate, will be called upon to serve their country and its flag and who will waken each morning for two or three years to feel the full force of this country's sovereignty.

The one-worlder does have Isaiah to back him up but not the draft which every boy, as soon as he gets out of college, is likely to face. Some do evade it by trickery but should war come, as it often has, they have an unpaid debt to settle and many of them are caught by their own devices at most inconvenient times. The draft-dodger remains a louse in the American concept of fair play.

Of course, girls may listen to the one-world speeches with starry-eyed emotionalism, hoping that the day may come when their marriages will not be postponed by such unpleasantness as universal military service. However, American women - that is, those who are truly American - have never wanted their menfolk to be either cowards or cheats and they have never run away from the consequences of life. We still breed a good stock. The one-worlder does advocate a noble ideal, but history is moving the other way. Asia has thrown off the shackles of imperialism to replace them by the shackles of intensive nationalism. So has Africa. So

Only the United States has lost its sense of nationalism and patriotism and is paying a fearful price for accepting phraseology for truth and hope for fact. The danger is that some of our people think not in terms of the welfare of their own country and their responsibility for its survival, but rather in terms so broad, so widespread, as to be realistically meaningless except to a cover for blatant selfishness.

The good old Commencement Day orator who preached love of country in poetic language and heated oratory was much closer to the truth and to morality than those unfortunate weary old men who hope to be regarded by youth as forwardlooking because they preach a doctrine of a world of love, as did Micah and Confucius and about everybody else, including Leo Tolstoy, only it never happened. The idea is that if one sets his ideals far enough ahead, say four or five thousand years away, he cannot possibly be wrong, for who will say him nay?

So, one spends an hour or two reading the reported remarks of the so-called great men, some of whom are truly useful in their own limited fields but who, when they speak in terms philosophical, generally have to hire a speech-writer to bring Edmund Burke or Patrick Henry or perhaps Karl Marx up-todate and so their words are nostalgic and one wonders where he read them before and in what context. It becomes particularly amusing to listen to a hardboiled businessman, who in his proper domain fights against doctrines which, in the hired speech, flow from his lips like manna from Heaven. And then one wonders, does she know what he is reading? Does he know that a prankster played a trick on him? (Copyright, 1959, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Nixon's mission to Moscow has plenty of overtones of presidential politics, and headlines are important.

When the Vice President showed visible irritation over sharing the trip with Milton, a White House emissary explained to him that Ike felt Khrushchev would talk more freely if he knew he was also talking to the President's brother. This only made Nixon madder.

For the White House explanation was a direct reflection on his own ability as a diplomat-reporter. Furthermore it has become known, contrary to earlier statements, that Milton will take the entire trip with Nixon - through Siberia and everywhere else.

> Ike And Adenauer Though the United States prides itself on keeping out of European domestic politics, the White House, by accident or otherwise, was embroiled in the German political feud up to its

Inside fact about the Adenauer-Erhard battle was that the pudgy German Vice Chancellor had suspected some weeks ago that the Eisenhower administration was against him. So right in the middle of the battle for German leadership he made a special trip to Washington to find inquiries, Erhard's worst fears were realized. Adenauer, back in Bonn, announced that he would continue as Chancellor.

In various conferences at the State Department and the White House he inquired whether it was true as reported, that President Eisenhower was opposed to his becoming Chancellor of Germany. Naturally he got emphatic denials.

The Vice Chancellor has now patched up his differences with the 83-year-old Chancellor, but it's an uneasy truce. And the inside word is that Adenauer will step down in six months in favor of Erhard. When that time comes, the United States will have a very irritated friend in the driver's seat in Germany. For Erhard strongly suspects that he was given the runaround in Washington and that the emphatic denials that Ike was opposed to him were merely diplomatic denials.

Strauss And Anti-Semitism??

Many Jewish leaders are concerned over the attempt of some Jews to make the fight against Admiral Strauss appear motivated by anti-Semitism. They are fearful, first, because the maiority of Jews are against Strauss in view of what he did to Dr. Robert Oppenheimer: second, because any attempt to put Senate voting on a religious basis is bound to backfire against a minority group.

Two prominent Jewish Senators. Ernest Gruening of Alaska and Dick Neuberger of Oregon, incidentally, plan to vote against Strauss.

Significantly, Jewish groups have also gone out of their way to express confidence in Sen. Gale McGee of Wyoming, the member of the Senate Commerce Committee who attended every single one of the Strauss hearings and has been most vigorous in his opposition to the Secretary of Commerce.

Recently McGee was invited to speak before the United Jewish Appeal in Chicago at the Twin Orchard Country Club, Coincidentally, the chairman of the meeting who introduced the opponent of Strauss with words of tribute was Charles Strauss. No self-effacing one; the one who figuratively scrubs the floors for all of the others. Among the Bishops, that one is my kid sister Adele. She's the best. She never had a dime, and she has been hit by hard luck so many times that she feels nervous when things go well, but she will do anything for

She's a little woman, blonde turning gray. She was always pretty, with a trim figure, except for a time in her early married life when she ate all her frustrations and looked like a tiny balloon. She was a neat dresser, too, and once in a while, when I whispered: "You look real sharp tonight, kid" she'd look up in surprise and say: "This dress? I've had it four years.

There were two boys and a girl in our family: Jim, John and Adele, spaced about two and a half years apart. My mother was always strict, always religious, and always worrie' about her one daughter. The boys-well, what can you do with boys? But Adele, that was something else. My mother burdened the child with so many lectures about morality and purity that I could never understand where the kid got the nerve to go out on a date.

But she went. And she fell in love with a skinny lad who was trying to coax a few hairs to emerge on his upper lip. She married him when she was too young. To everyone's surprise. Adele turned out to be a born housekeeper. The floors gleamed. the furniture was waxed, the kitchen was spotless, even the crocheted doilies looked crisp.

They had three children: Robert and Jean and Elinor. The boy was still an infant when he developed a rash. Adele, not much more than a child herself, put him in a hospital. In two days, Bobby was dead. She shed scalding tears and kept saying: Why? Why? Why?' The doctors were cool. "Your baby had an infection called impetigo. He was doing well and he got pneumonia.

She required a long time to recover. Her husband developed a neurological disease. He was a naval draughtsman, a good one. But he had no faith in medicine and said it would be all right if everybody would leave him alone

In every family, there is a and permit him to work. He collapsed several times. His illness b-ought on rages. She wasn't permitted to mention his illness. nor even to ask him how he felt

He died. Adele Parmelee took a job with the telephone company. She had to support two daughters. She worked hard all day, and did the laundry and the housecleaning at night. She asked no favors of the .est of us.

The girls grew up and married. They got the same lectures their mother listened to. It looked as though life was about over for Adele. The., she met Emil Steencken, a giant of a man who was a widower. He worked in a maintenance gang on the West Shore Railroad. Once again, Adele married.

Everything was going fine, when my mother began to lose her sight. Dad was working every day, and Mom was alone in their apartment. He made breakfast for her, and cooked the dinner and did the dishes. This could not go on. Who was elected to take over? One guess.

It was a long tedious job. Mom was blind, feeble, and just as much the boss as when we were all children. Adele had to take it. She even gave my mother her daily bath, powdered her body, and fixed her hair-just as, once upon a time, the positions were reversed.

My mother is gone, and my father has retired. Adele takes care of him. She does the cooking, the shopping, the laundry, She never complains, and she seidom goes out to visit anymore. She finds it difficult to sleep, so she sits up watching the late show and the late late show. She is the only person I know who watches T.V. from across the top of a newspaper.

Except for meeting Emil, she has never had any good luck. Still, when good fortune comes to others, she goes wild with enthusiasm. Her daughters now have babies of their own, and problems of their own. Today. I've been riding a train south and I looked at the date on the newspaper. It is Adele's 47th birthday. As usual, I forgot to send greetings. I'll make it up when I get back home.

She doesn't know it, but I'm her number one fan (Copyright, 1959

Round Table To Run At Chicago July 4

BEST BET: Top News

CHICAGO (AP)-Round Table, thoroughbred racing's all - time money winner, will try to add to his earnings when he runs in the $75,000 added Stars and Stripes Handicap July 4.

Any doubt that the 5-year-old Travis M. Kerr star is finished was erased Saturday after Round Table came off a four-month layoff to win the $56,800 Citation Handicap in Washington Park.

Round Table equalled the track record of 1:33 2-5 set by Swaps in 1956 and picked up $33,750 to boost his career earnings to $1,-

Driver Ditches Tractor-Trailer To Avert Crash

Brakes Give Out Near Bloomington

A serious accident was averted vesterday afternoon when a tractor-trailer driver ditched the rig after the brakes got hot as the vehicle descended Maryland Route 135 west of Bloomington.

A passenger in the cab of the tractor, Dorothy Edwards, 21, of Logan, W. Va., was injured when she leaped from the vehicle which went out of control and plummeted down over an embankment into a wooded area.

Joseph Gasle, 36, of Cincinnati, Ohio, the driver, was slightly injured in the crash which occurred at 2:25 p. m. about one mile west of Bloomington. Averted Tragedy

Trooper Bruce Diehl of the State Police said the accident could have been worse had the driver decided to take the tractortrailer on down the highway.

Driver Ditches Tractor-Trailer To Avert Crash

Brakes Give Out Near Bloomington

A serious accident was averted yesterday afternoon when a tractor-trailer driver ditched the rig after the brakes got hot as the vehicle descended Maryland Route 135 west of Bloomington.

A passenger in the cab of the tractor, Dorothy Edwards, 21, of Logan, W. Va., was injured when she leaped from the vehicle which went out of control and plummeted down over an embankment into a wooded area.

Joseph Gasle, 36, of Cincinnati, Ohio, the driver, was slightly injured in the crash which occurred at 2:25 p. m. about one mile west of Bloomington. Averted Tragedy

Trooper Bruce Diehl of the State Police said the accident could have been worse had the driver decided to take the tractortrailer on down the highway.

The trooper said quite a few children were playing in the Bloomington area near the high-

The rig was carrying electrical equipment used by the L. I. Thomas Joyland Shows which is presenting a carnival in Westernport this week.

The woman passenger was treated by a Piedmont physician. She sustained abrasions of her nose and upper lip and injuries to her legs when she leaped from the cab.

The driver sustained minor injuries and was treated at the carnival grounds in Westernport. Police said the rig ripped out four or five steel guard rails when it left the highway into a wooded area but remained on its wheels. A large beacon light being hauled on the tractortrailer was jarred loose and thrown to the ground.

The tractor was damaged heavily, according to Trooper Diehl, who said the driver was operating the vehicle in low second when the brakes got hot. 'Mike' Yantorno Marks

High Winds Cause Power Failure

High winds, unusual for this time of the year, were the cause of a power failure in the Bowling Green area yesterday.

A spokesman for the Potomac Edison Company said 35 to 40 customers were without electricity from about 11:30 a.m. to 2:10 p.m.

Power was interrupted through about six transformers, he said. A fuse was also blown at the top of Dingle Hill.

The affected area was in the vicinity of the rear of the fire hall in Bowling Green. A piece of primary feed line carryi..g about 2,300 volts was affected in the failure.

One resident of the area reported disruption of television pro-
